In this course, we will study the American Revolution by examining the political theory which sparked the revolution itself and which lay behind the writing of the Constitution. We will begin by looking at the important predecessors to the revolution, particularly the works of John Locke, the Baron de Montesquieu, and David Hume. We will then consider important works from the period surrounding the revolution, including works by Thomas Paine and Thomas Jefferson. Finally, we will look at the debates surrounding the adoption of the U.S. Constitution, including the Federalist Papers and important anti-Federalist works.

The eighteenth century was a time of remarkable intellectual activity in the West, and the Americans played a central role in it, both reflecting the thought in Europe and influencing the course of thoughts and events there. Although it was over 200 years ago, the eighteenth century was a modern period: their concerns are largely our concerns. But since they come from a different background, they approach these concerns in a different and (I hope) illuminating way. So we want to examine these ideas in their context, but we also want to see what these thinkers can tell us about the role and nature of government and of society.

Texts

Joseph Addison, Cato (Liberty)*
Alexander Hamilton and James Madison, The Pacificus-Helvidius Debates of 1793-94 (Liberty)*
David Hume, Essays: Moral, Political and Literary (Liberty)*
John Locke, Letter concerning Toleration (Hackett)
John Locke, Second Treatise on Government (Hackett)
Montesquieu, Selected Political Writings (Hackett)
Thomas Paine, Political Writings (Cambridge)
David Wooton, ed. The Essential Federalist and Anti-Federalist Papers (Hackett)

* The Liberty Classics editions indicated can be purchased, but they are also available free online, and I have created links to them on Blackboard. Most of the other texts can be found online in some form. However, I have a preference that we use the print text I have assigned, since they are cheap and having a common text will make references easier for everyone.
Recommended:

I recommend that you read a short general history of the revolutionary period as a background for our discussion of the Revolution and the debates about the Constitution. I have ordered Gordon Wood’s The American Revolution (Modern Library, 2003) for that purpose, but any good general history will do.

Course requirements

The following is a list of the assignments required to complete the course and their approximate due dates. The course grade is divided into 450 points, apportioned as shown:

Class participation, you will note, is a significant part of your grade. This class will conducted as a seminar, and so participation is expected. Everyone should come to class prepared to discuss the readings—or at least, to ask questions about it.

In addition, several times during the term, I expect you to send me a one-page reflections on some aspect of that week’s readings, due on the date indicated at 8:00 p.m. Turn them in by copying a text into journal entry under your group number and date on the Reflections page on the Blackboard site. These papers should respond to some specific arguments or position in the readings by explaining why you agree or disagree with it. For these reaction papers, the class is divided into three groups, determined by the first letter of your last name:

- Group 1: PHL students
- Group 2: PSC students
- Group 3: Writing students

Please keep track of when your reflection is due. Due dates for each group are listed on the schedule of readings.

The major assignments in this course will be done using a tutorial system. I will give you a series of questions about particular texts, and I will ask you to respond to them in a paper of 6-8 pages. You and another student will meet with me in my office during the week set aside for that purpose. Together, the three of us will discuss each of your papers. While attending a tutorial is required, you will graded only on what is in your paper. I will explain the tutorial method in more detail later.

For your final assignment, you will have a choice: you may either write a third tutorial of 8-10 pages on a topic I will give you, or you may write an 8-10 page paper on a topic of your own choosing. This latter option will give you the opportunity to explore an issue of particular interest to you at greater length. Note that the paper must be a philosophy paper: it should explain and evaluate a line of argument that is important to the political philosophy in this period. It can not be a research paper on the people or the period, or even on the controversies of the day. I will be happy, however, to help you develop your topic. In any case, if you choose to write a paper, you must consult me.
Writing students: The students taking the course for writing credit have the same assignments as the other students with two exceptions. First, they will rewrite each of the first two tutorials, taking into account my comments and new insights they have about the issues. Each rewrite will be worth 100 points. In addition, they will write four reaction papers rather than just three, so they will be worth 40 points. The total possible points is, then, 660 points.

Academic honesty: I will hold you to high standards of academic honesty. In your written works, you should always cite sources for any quotations and for any summaries of ideas that you present that are not your own. For a full statement of the university policy on academic honesty, please consult https://www.rochester.edu/college/honesty/. The Honor Pledge will be required on all tutorial assignments and reflection papers.
